The Amazon circa 2011 is more than a land of gorgeous nature and indigenous cultures. It's also the fiercest place for your next upscale eco-vacation. In the far reaches of remote southeastern Peru, along the edge of Tambopata National Reserve, the renowned Inkaterra Reserva Amazonica commingles wild Amazonia with rustic luxury. Surrounded by the greatest biodiversity in the world, this sustainable eco-lodge provides a safe jungle experience for adventurous families and couples looking to immerse themselves in Amazonia's wonders.

Jetsetter review

Perched on the banks of Peru's Madre de dios River, Inkaterra Reserva Amazonica champions the concept of sustainable eco-tourism, presenting the treasures of Amazonia from a rustic-chic eco-lodge. With just the right combination of select creature comforts, stellar service and hands-on outdoor experiences, Inkaterra Reserva Amazonica presents a gentle, fascinating introduction to the rain forest and its splendors.

Every hour at the Inkaterra Reserva Amazonica leads to adventure. A group of brilliantly colored blue macaws passes overhead. A curious three-toed sloth peeks down from its canopy comfort zone, surveying the onlookers. Intrepid guides coax larger-than-life tarantulas from their dens. Chatty squirrel monkeys and massive red howlers indulge in the seasonal offerings of fallen fruit.

Expert guides will take guests into the rainforest to spot the region's diverse wildlife. The unpredictability of nature unveils different kinds of wildlife sightings and interactions each day. Guests have the freedom to choose their own adventures based on the vast outdoor enthusiast menu — some by canoe, some by boat, some on foot, others suspended high in the treetop canopy. Local guides are assigned to groups of six and accompany guests on daily journeys through the surrounding biodiversity hot spots, adjusting the tours to the comfort and adventure level desired. Those seeking lighter fare can partake in tamer activities, like a visit to Inkaterra's butterfly garden.
